

ACORN STREET ON BEACON HILL
Boston, Massachusetts

Acorn Street (off Willow St.) on the back slope of Beacon Hill is paved with river stones which were available from the banks on the nearby Charles. This charming, gas-lit neighborhood is a carefully preserved reminder of how Boston looked about 1850.

Dear Caroline,

I know you're currently in Miami, but hopefully you will be at home + rested when this arrives. I actually left Boston yesterday and am writing this from a nice little diner in the pretty town of Amherst. I think you would like it here - not for uni necessarily, but just as a nice place to visit. Boston was fine. The drivers were crazy but it was a beautiful amalgam of old + new. Harvard was OK, but MIT was great. My mother and I also went on a Duck Tour - a historic tour of Boston in a giant green amphibious vehicle that was more educational and less stupid than it sounds.
