Dear Caroline,

As you can tell from the three different shots of it, the people here are very fond of their lake. It is 6 km in circumference and contains one small island, on which is a church that dates from the seventeenth century. The town is in the Alps, and, indeed, the place is very alpine and picturesque. There are flowers blooming everywhere, the streets are narrow and twisting, and I have been in more than one converted barn. This is the sort of place Grätlinburg was modelled after, but it is lacking most (if not all) of Grätlinburg's tacky insincerity.

Fond regards, S.E.
